PPCLI MUSEUM UPDATE

20 May 2008

The PPCLI Museum Gallery was recently renovated to enhance its appeal to everyone. This upgrade incorporated new video screens to replace the old CRT monitors, increase the display size to improve the quality of the presentations, and incorporate new pictures that you don't really get a chance to see.

New Monitor Upgrades

This project allows us to display our artefacts and, hidden images that were lying idle in the basement of the Museum. At the moment, new images are being added to our collection to give a better representation of our Regimental history from our founding to the present day. We have monitors that depict everyday life from Korea, United Nation Operations, NATO missions, battalion events, and Afghanistan.

This project is still growing. Two more monitors will be added shortly to enhance WW1 and WW2 images. These images are an important part of our heritage and with limited space in the gallery, using monitors is the best way to give a visual representation of a changing collection from our archives. The key phrase is changing collection. This collection will continually be updated with new images to keep you coming back.

Expanded Afghanistan Display

The recent response from visitors to the museum was extremely positive. Our retired soldiers loved the older images as they could name almost everyone in the revolving images. A recent Basic Infantry Qualification course (formerly TQ3) candidates loved the Afghanistan display. Soon video will be incorporated into the slide show presentations. The video will come from our archives once it is converted into a digital format for everyone to view. We will not rest until this project is complete.

So, if you're not busy and have a little free time on your hands, come on down to the PPCLI Museum and check out the improvements to the Gallery. You won't be disappointed.
